In the Tribunal of Reason, Kant argues that human knowledge is limited to the world of experience. We can only know things that we can experience through our senses. This means that we can never know things-in-themselves, or the true nature of reality. We can only know the way that things appear to us.

Kant's argument is based on the distinction between the phenomenal world and the noumenal world. The phenomenal world is the world that we experience through our senses. The noumenal world is the true nature of reality, which is beyond our experience. Kant argues that we can only know the phenomenal world, and that the noumenal world is unknowable.

The Tribunal of Reason is a complex and challenging work, but it is also a deeply rewarding one. Kant's arguments are rigorous and his insights are profound. The Tribunal of Reason is a masterpiece of philosophical inquiry that has had a profound impact on the history of philosophy.
