Abraham Lincoln is one of the most iconic figures in American history. His life has been the subject of countless books, articles, and films, but few have focused on the two women who had the greatest influence on him: his mothers, Nancy and Sally Lincoln.

In his new book, Lincoln's Mothers, author Stephen Berry tells the untold story of these remarkable women. Through extensive research and interviews with descendants, Berry reveals the lives of Nancy and Sally Lincoln and their profound impact on their son.

Nancy Lincoln was born in Virginia in 1784. She was a strong and independent woman who raised her family in a log cabin on the Kentucky frontier. She was a devout Christian and instilled in her son a deep faith that would sustain him throughout his life.

Sally Lincoln was born in Kentucky in 1791. She was a kind and gentle woman who was devoted to her family. She was a skilled seamstress and made most of the clothes for her children. She also taught her son to read and write, and she encouraged his interest in learning.

Nancy and Sally Lincoln were very different women, but they shared a common bond: their love for their son. They raised him to be a good man, and they instilled in him the values that would guide him throughout his life.

Lincoln's mothers were a profound influence on his life. They shaped his character, his values, and his destiny. Without them, he would never have become the great man that he was.

Lincoln's Mothers is a fascinating and moving account of the two women who raised one of the most important figures in American history. It is a must-read for anyone interested in Lincoln's life and legacy.
